Plastic surgeons find joy in the creation of art

"Life is short and the art long." — Hippocrates (460-370 B.C.)

The art and plastic surgery share the common intersection where the human body meets the aesthetic. The result is the formation of something unique to the individual. It is, perhaps, the most potent proof that we wouldn’t be surprised if art and medicine shared a common source. Many artists and surgeons have been found to be from creative families and have been inspired by art or art-making processes in their youth. The medical art world is full of artists and surgeons who have been inspired by art to pursue medicine, and vice versa. The result is a beautiful and inspiring intersection where medicine and art meet.

"I don’t want to sound like ‘Pollyanna’ but I do feel that the greatest forms of art..." — Dr. Taub

"I’m really amazed when someone says ‘I’m not doing art. I’ve never done art. I’m not doing art.’" — Dr. Rosenthal

The highest form of art is the one you can accomplish as you are. The idea of doing something different each time is the thing that makes it real to you. You can’t become a plastic surgeon without doing surgery. You can’t become a plastic surgeon without doing plastic surgery. It’s the same thing, but it’s different each time. You can’t be a plastic surgeon without doing surgery. You can’t be a plastic surgeon without doing plastic surgery. It’s the same thing, but it’s different each time. You can’t be a plastic surgeon without doing surgery. You can’t be a plastic surgeon without doing plastic surgery. It’s the same thing, but it’s different each time. You can’t be a plastic surgeon without doing surgery. You can’t be a plastic surgeon without doing plastic surgery. It’s the same thing, but it’s different each time.
